

FIG. 1

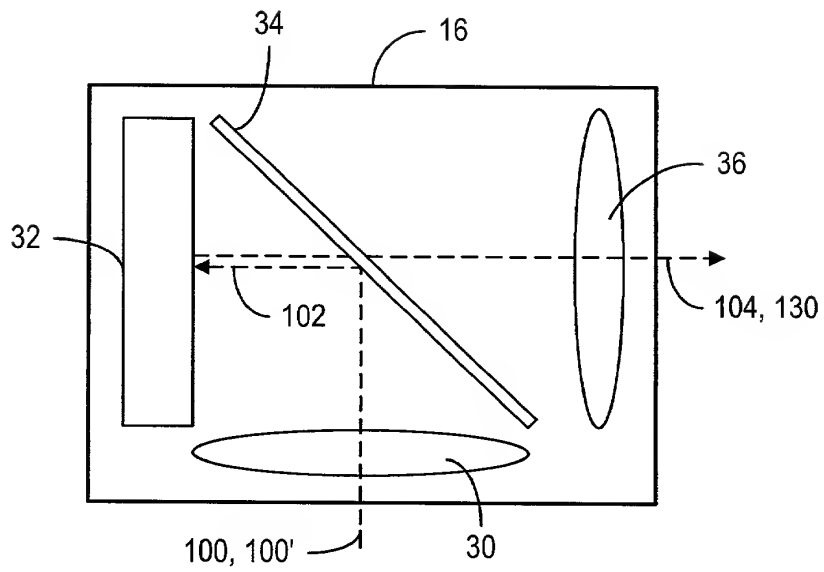

FIG. 2a

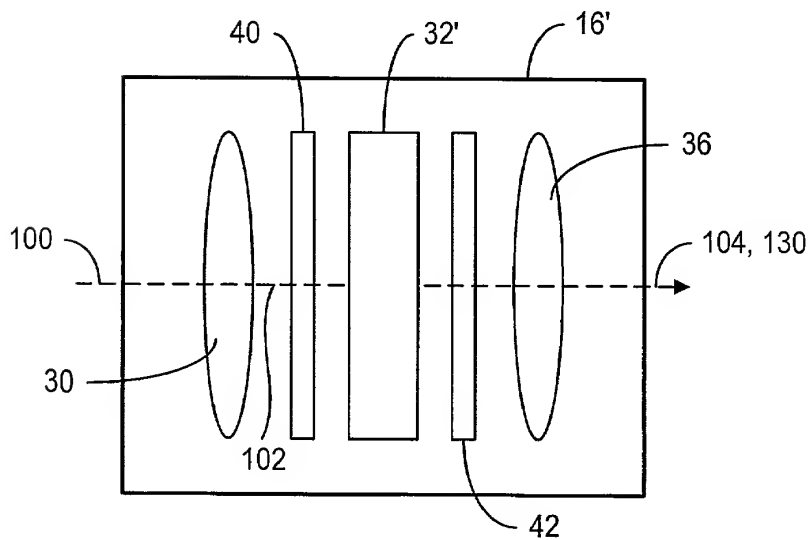

FIG. 2b

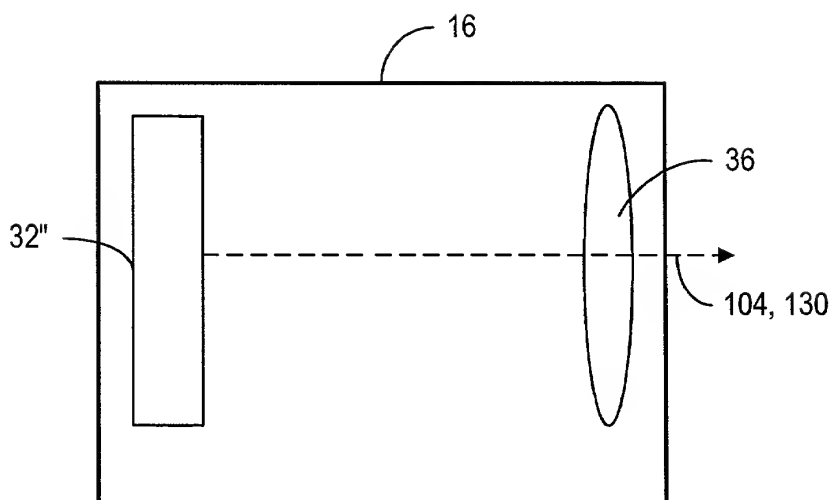

FIG. 2c

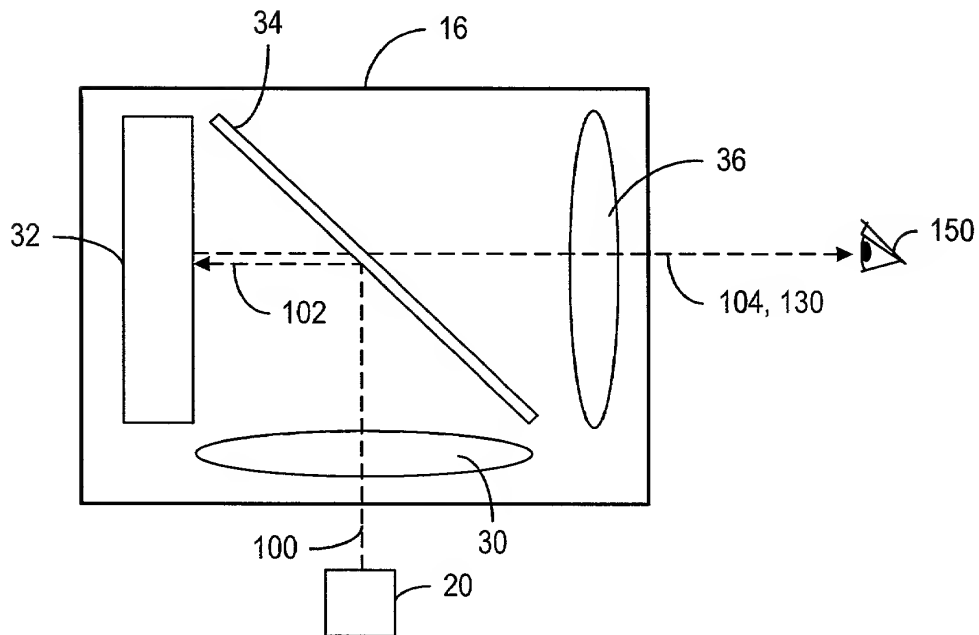

FIG. 3

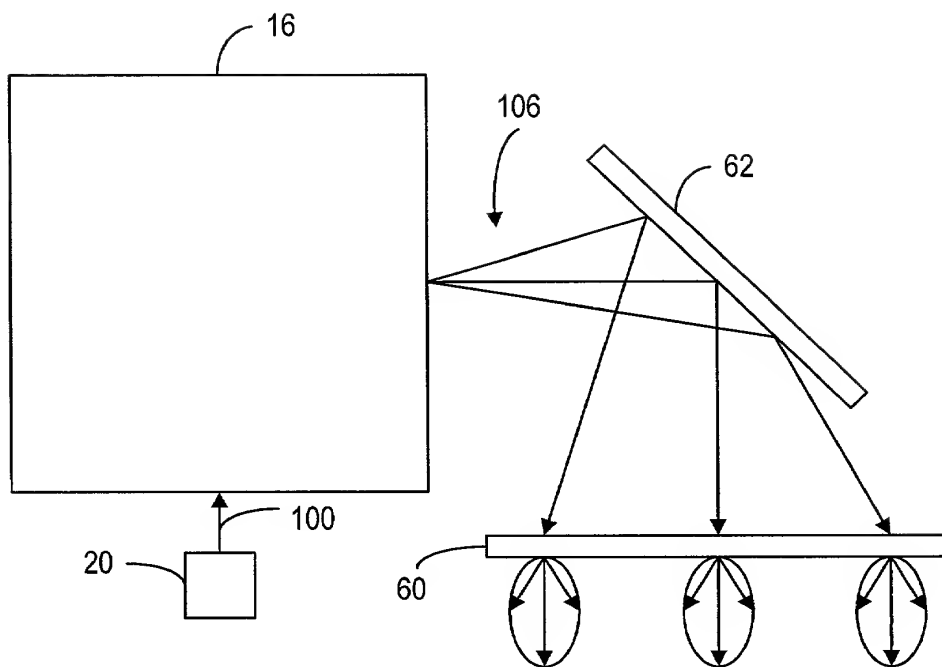

FIG. 4

FIG. 5

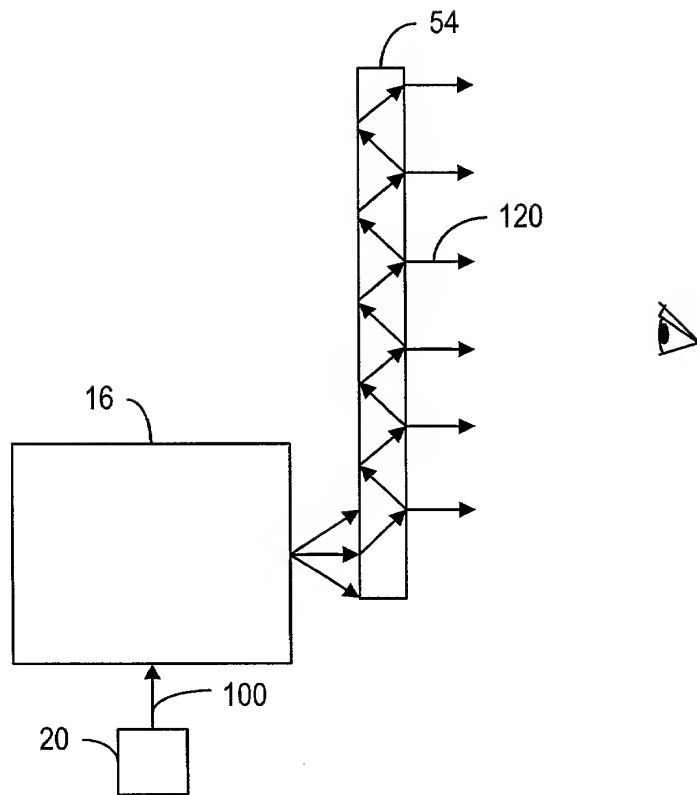

FIG. 5

Figure 1 shows the results of the first two experiments. In both cases, the mean number of correct responses was significantly higher than the number of incorrect responses, indicating that the subjects were able to discriminate between the two stimuli. The results of the third experiment are shown in Figure 2. The mean number of correct responses was significantly higher than the number of incorrect responses, indicating that the subjects were able to discriminate between the two stimuli.

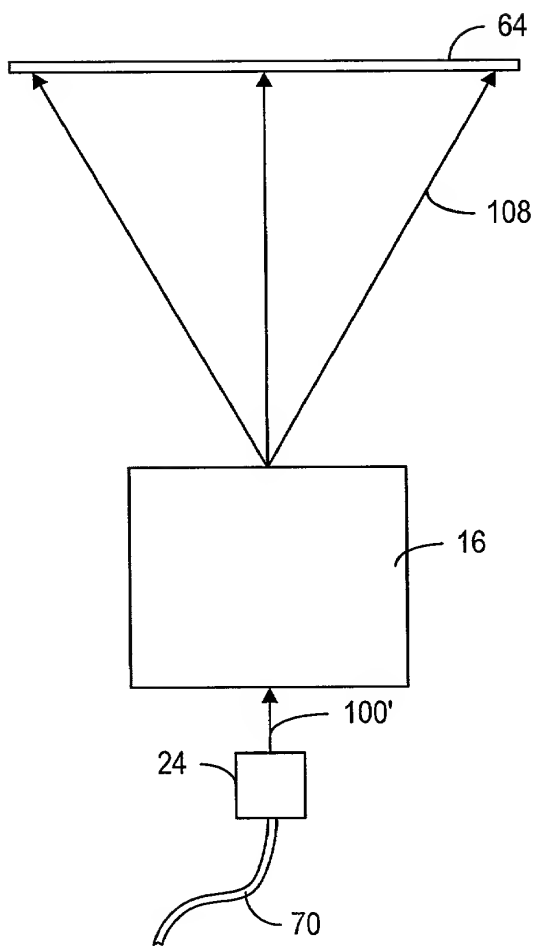

FIG. 6

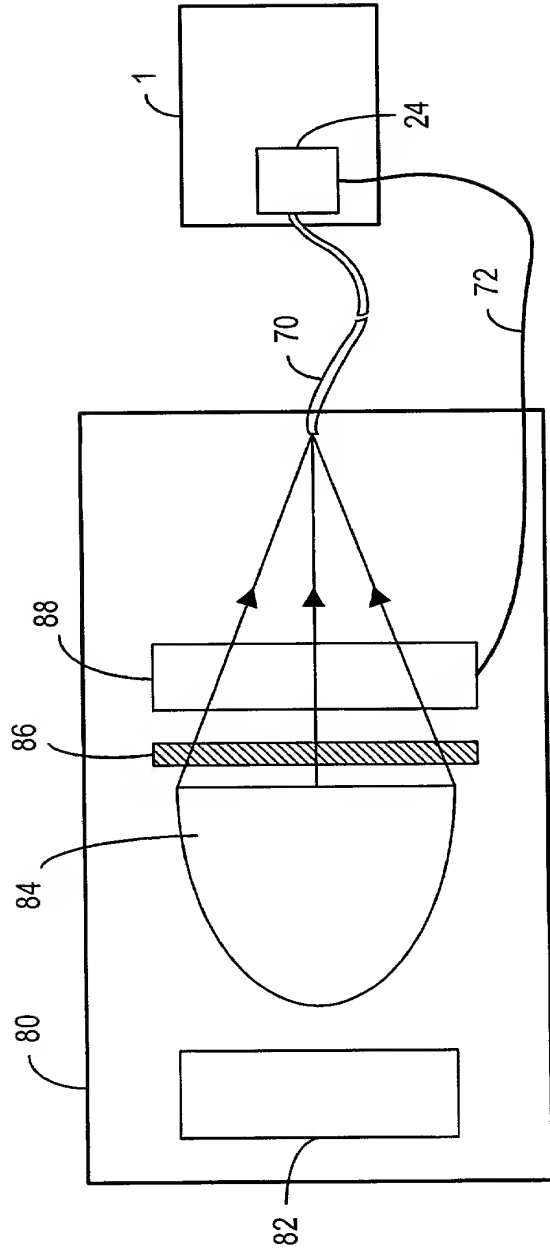

FIG. 7